

Diane has visited at least 24 different locations during the project (Picture: Diane Goes For You)

Have you ever spotted something weird on Google Maps and wished you could go and check it out, only to discover it's hundreds (or thousands) of miles away from you?

Well, one adventurer has spent weeks, if not months, of her spare time fulfilling these wishes for people by visiting places all over Europe that piqued any interest from above.

Diane Goes For You is a project started by a Frenchwoman, known only by her maiden name, who has spent a year traveling around the continent visiting oddities spied by people on Google Maps.

For example, someone was wondering why this tree in south-western France appeared to be floating:

Does this tree float?

(Picture: Diane Goes for You)

MORE: Did Google Maps catch these two men in the middle of a dodgy deal?

Diane investigated and found it was just a tree that was being swallowed by a sand dune.

11 arbre

As her project grew, people started to request that she just fulfil their traveling fantasies – one person simply asked her what the walls of Bronzefield prison in England felt like.

Prison prison2

A sort of Indiana Jones for the digital age, Diane has busted mysteries in places including Finland, Britain, Ukraine and Sicily.

She has never asked for any money for her services.

Diane, who describes her hobby as a ‘game’, said: ‘Even on the most detailed satellite view, the world